CPW Report No. 37 -- USSR

SUMMARY

Criticism of Party activities per se is limited in scope. References to them appear in context of agricultural work. Suppression of criticism within the Party organizations is dealt with sporadically. In intra-Party life, the membership is cautioned against the formation of cliques on one hand, and continued friction and squabbling, on the other. Bolshevik leadership is said to be a happy medium between the two extremes, and is defined as lack of fear of criticism from below and the conscious avoidance of the "family circle" atmosphere among officials.

Sowing and crop maintenance predominate in the agricultural news which is otherwise diffuse in character. In an obvious reference to the endless flow of promises and short on fulfillment. Agricultural charter violations are still reported from scattered sources. Inadequate performance in forest-belt planting and maintenance claims some official attention. The fishing industries in Khabarovsk Krai and the Crimean Oblast are still lagging behind the plan.
